Fri, 18 Jan 2019 06:35:00 GMT Non-Bayesian Decision Theory : Beliefs and Desires as ... - theory in which the agentâ€™s actual desires and beliefs figure as genuine reasons for deciding what to do. The non-Bayesian decision theory defended here is an attempt to construct a theory that meets this demand. 1.1 The subjective non-Bayesian approach Non-Bayesian decision theory is a heterogenous set of theories. For example, theories advocating objective concepts of probability, such as Laplace (1814), Keynes (1921), Popper (1957), and Mellor (1971) are all non-Bayesian. However, the ... Sat, 19 Jan 2019 00:36:00 GMT Bayesian probability theory - rctn.org - For the deliberating Bayesian agent, the output of decision theory is not a set of preferences over alternative acts - these preferences are on the contrary used as input to the theory. Instead, the output is a (set of) utility function(s) that can be used for describing the agent as an expected utility maximizer, which are of limited normative relevance.
